ABSTRACT

Presenting approximately 500 libraries and information sources through the National Natural Resources Library and Information System (NNRLIS), this directory identifies and locates the libraries within the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. The following departments are included: Office of the Secretary, Office of the Solicitor, Geological Survey, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Mines, National Park Service, Heritage Conservation and Recreation Service, Bureau of Reclamation, and the Fish and Wildlife Service. The names and addresses of each library and information center are presented in summary form including the library telephone number(s), librarian, staff size, subject emphasis, collection size, special collections, services, and hours of operation. A geographical index, personnel index, and a subject index provide further information within the Department of Interior. Bureau of Indian Affairs schools and National Park Service sites are listed separately by state. (RTS)

This is a view of the Institute of American Indian Arts in Santa Fe, New Mexico, one of several Indian schools of higher education. It has about 300 students and gives training in all forms of the arts.

The cover illustration is the work of Michael Dixon and the graphics were done by Grey Cohoe, both of whom are students at the Institute of American Indian Arts. The Institute, under the auspices of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, is also part of the National Natural Resources Library and Information System. While this network serves the Federal Government, the U.S. Department of the Interior, and the general public, it also serves the Indian community and its school system.

To Department of the Interior Library Workers:

The Directory of Libraries and Information Services within the Department of the Interior for 1978 shows the continuing growth of the National Natural Resources Library and Information System (NNRLIS). The number of libraries and information sources listed in this Directory has grown to almost 500. This is a substantial increase from the slightly over 400 sources listed in the 1976 Directory. We would appreciate it if any of you in the field would let us know of other libraries we have left out. What we are attempting to do is improve the access to information—not just to Interior—but to the Nation.

Through NNRLIS, a number of libraries within the Department are helping to build a joint bibliographic data bank shared by all. Should any of you be interested in participating, please telephone 202-343-2267, FTS 343-2267. The amount of information is increasing at an alarming rate, and this information is of great importance to those scientists and management officials who are working in the fields of natural resources and the environment. In order to make this information manageable, it is necessary to bring as much of this data as possible under control and make it readily accessible.

The Department is more than just a scientific and technical agency, it is also a Department where people are important. The greatest increase in the number of services has been in parks, historic sites, and recreation areas. To the people of this vast land, their Nation's history and the use of its scenic areas is of great importance. NNRLIS is a repository of much of this information.

And speaking of people, together with the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), the Department's Office of Library and Information Services, is trying to bring about an improvement in the libraries and media centers in the BIA Indian school system and in Indian communities. Much effort has gone into working with the Indian community to develop goals and plans for such improvement, and we all look forward to the White House Pre-Conference on Indian Library and Information Services On or Near Reservations which is to be held in October 1978.

I hope this directory will be a useful tool in helping you to provide better service.
